October 1, 2015

ARLINGTON, Va.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Oct. 1, 2015-- Towers Watson (NASDAQ:TW), a global professional services company, announced the completion of its acquisition of Brovada, a Canadian technology provider for property & casualty (P&C) insurers and brokerages. The acquisition will enhance Towers Watson's capabilities across its portfolio of software targeted at the P&C market.

"Brovada's capabilities around portals, market connectivity, data movement and legacy system integrations dovetail extremely well with our existing analytical and software solutions for insurers," said Eric Speer, global leader for Towers Watson's Risk and Financial Services business segment. "Brovada will allow us to expand our solutions, enabling us to offer insurers a broader suite of products via software-as-a-service and cloud-based technologies."

Brovada will operate as a separate unit within the company's Risk Consulting and Software business, part of its Risk and Financial Services business segment. Brovada's founder and CEO, Karl Greenlaw, will continue to lead the Brovada team.

"We're very excited to join Towers Watson and help sustain its mission in providing high-value advisory services and solutions to the insurance industry and related sectors," said Greenlaw. "Most importantly, our values are aligned. Both organizations share the same laser focus on clients and the ability to move the market forward through innovative solutions and technology."
